A new bill introduced in California would give beer lovers the right to have their money go to charity at bars and other drinking establishments — though it's not clear how much of that money would go to the needy or charity.. And for the past 20 years, the researchers report, alcohol consumption has increased at a greater rate among women who were in their 40s than among women born in their 20s or older. It's a pattern that's been observed in the United States; over the past half century, the proportion of women aged 35 to 45 who have ever drank has increased. However, the researchers found that there was no correlation between any particular age of mother and any particular level of alcohol consumption among adults aged 25 to 64.. The study, conducted by researchers at the University of Southern Denmark in Denmark and published Tuesday in the American Economic Review, examined the effects of increasing maternal age. Using data from the Danish National Birth Register's 2006 birth certificate, the researchers examined whether an increase in age correlated with an increase in alcoholism.
